Why Molly Simms is glowing in the dark and which celebs are staying lip-locked for hours

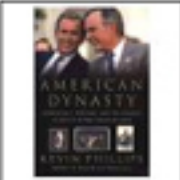

"Today" contributor and celeb style expert Steven Cojocarú answers these burning questions, plus a look at how the American idols are getting bronzed and the secrets to the beautiful skin of the stars

Updated: 5:16 p.m. ET March 24, 2004

Why is Molly Simms glowing in the dark? How are the American Idols getting bronzed? And which celebrities are staying lip-locked for hours? "Today" contributor and celebrity style expert Steven Cojocarú answers these questions and more in his latest appearance on "Today." Check out the items he discusses on the show:

Momint's, the highly fashionable "Modelicious" breath mint
 How many Momints does it take to satisfy a model? You may want to ask Giselle Bundchen this question since she leads a crowd of supermodels who are in love with the new Cinnamon and Winter Burst liquid-filled breath mints that boast zero calories and zero carbs! There are a million and one breath mints that do the trick, so what makes these so special?! Momints — the teeny-tiny aqua and crimson colored beads filled with peppermint liquid — give mouths a major hit of refreshment, and takes just one Momint for sweetsmelling breath. But, perhaps these models and celebs alike (also Momints poppers: Jude Law, Naomi Watts, Benicio Del Toro, P. Diddy, Mary J. Blige, Cameron Diaz) have embraced the breath fresheners as a result of the fantastic tube packaging. The little spheres of liquid-filled joy come in an adorable little tube which resembles a perfume sample, and will easily slide into a designer purse (or a guys wallet) of any size or shape.
